PORTLAND, May 29.—Wax and green beans are scarce just now, when they ought to be plentiful, said a Front street wholesaler today, "and this is solely the result of the action of one eccentric firm on the street. Fairly good shipments of the stuff came in a week or more ago from California and they should have sold at fair prices; but this firm, for some reason that has not been made known, saw fit to sell the product at figures that meant loss for all concerned."

Wit and Humor

JOSEPH W. BAILEY.

A MAGAZINE writer once asked the first ten members of the press gallery at Washington that he met whom they regarded as the ablest man in congress. Every one of them answered, "Senator Bailey of Texas." Bailey does not indulge in much humor in his speeches, though he at times crossed swords with Tom Reed and held his own with the best debaters in both the house and senate. He is especially happy as a story teller.

Bailey first appeared in politics in Texas as a delegate to a congressional convention. He, of course, spoke eloquently for his man. There was a deadlock, and so great an impression had Bailey made that some one proposed to nominate him, and a stampede started in his favor. Bailey felt in honor bound, however, to stand by his candidate and tried to stem the tide for himself, but all in vain. Finally an inspiration struck him. He announced that he had not reached the constitutional age of twenty-five, and as a result his name was dropped, and the man he favored was nominated. Bailey failed to say, however, that he would have been twenty-five before he would have had to take his seat, if elected.

The way Joe Bailey finally got his nomination to congress is told in the following anecdote: He was again a delegate to the convention and on the way met an old farmer. "Going to the convention?" asked Bailey. "Yep," said the farmer. "Ever hear of a young lawyer named Bailey around here?" asked Bailey. "Nope," said the farmer. "Good speaker, bright fellow, I understand," suggested Bailey. "S'pose so," said the farmer. "Yes," continued Bailey, "and he will be over there today, and I'll tell you what we'll do. We'll call on him to make a speech. You see all your friends, tell them about Bailey, and we'll call on him."

The farmer said "all right." No more was said about the matter until there was a lapse in the convention. Suddenly the farmer got up and suggested that the convention hear from Mr. Bailey. "A risin' young lawyer of these diggin's," he said, "an' a feller who talks like puttin' out fire." "Bailey! Bailey! Bailey!" more than a dozen yells went up, and Bailey came forth. He made one of the hottest speeches of his life, and the upshot of the whole thing was that the "risin' young lawyer of these diggin's" got the nomination for congress.

They were telling ghost stories in the Democratic cloak room in the senate, and Senator Bailey asked if anybody had heard the story of the man who had been reading late at night and who turned around to find something in the shape of a man, but without a head, sitting close beside him. "The man jumped up," said the senator, "bolted out of the house and ran like a whitehead until he could run no farther. When he was exhausted, he sank down on a log gasping, but hopeful that he had left the apparition behind. To his intense horror he found the same figure sitting beside him on the log when he looked around. He was too much played out to run just then, so he sat and shivered. In a minute the figure hunched up close and said, 'That was a very pretty race we had, wasn't it?'"

"Yes," gasped the man, "but it isn't a marker to the one we're going to have as soon as I get my breath."

ACADEMIC COSTUMES. Square Cap or Berretta Hood Survival of the Ancient Cope. Academic costume was originally the ordinary dress of the period in which it was prescribed. Mediaeval statutes were directed not to the wearing of any particular robe, but against extravagant taste in or deficiencies of dress. At Heidelberg, for instance, students were forbidden to go out without boots "unless clad in a garment reaching to the heels." The most purely academic part of the costume was the square cap or berretta, with a tuft on the top (in lieu of the very modern tassel), which was the distinctive badge of the mastership. Its possession was much coveted, and, according to one authority, "it is only in post mediaeval times that the berretta, first without, then with, the sacred 'apex,' has been usurped, first by bachelors, then by undergraduates and now (outside the universities) by mere choristers or school boys." The gown, or toga, on the other hand, was an unofficial robe or cassock of various colors, the favorite at Oxford being "green, blue or blood color."

The hood is a survival of the ancient cappa, or cope, which is still to be seen in the official robes of the chancellor of Cambridge. It formed part of the garment, like the cowl of a monk's robe, and was not restricted to graduates, being the ordinary clerical dress, and not even exclusively clerical. "It is only the material of the hood which was characteristic of degree or office," the use of miniver, for instance, being confined to masters. "Silk hoods came in perhaps toward the end of the fourteenth century as a summer alternative for masters, whose winter fur hoods were something more than an honorary appendage in the unwarmed schools and churches of mediaeval times." At Oxford undergraduates lost their hoods in 1480, but it was not till "about the beginning of Queen Elizabeth's reign" that the masters and stewards of incorporated societies, who also wore them, "cast them off their heads and hung them on their shoulders."—Dundee Advertiser.

APPEARANCES. Often a person is sized up by his appearance; by the tone that surrounds him. And more often a business house is sized up by the stationary it uses. A cheap letter head or a poor bill head gives a mighty poor first impression and makes business harder to transact. Good printing costs no more than poor printing. The first impression is half the battle in business. You wouldn't employ a "sloppy" salesman; why put up with "sloppy" stationery, that gives a wrong impression of the importance of your business. Let us do your printing and help you to make that ten strike. The J. S. Dellinger Co. ASTORIA, OREGON
